The Fortieth Anniversary

Next June Washburn will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of her founding. At that time the Carnegie library will be ready to dedicate, and eminent speakers will be present to honor the occasion.

In connection with this event it is most desirable that as many alumni be present as possible. Let all plan to come. Put down on your calendar, under the dates June 10-14 "Commencement, Washburn," and make your plans accordingly.

Washburn Clubs

Clubs, consisting of alumni, ex-students and former instructors of the college are reported from Chicago, New York and Kansas City. A county club has recently been organized among the students and alumni in Osborne county. Many other counties in the state have material for strong organizations of this sort.

Nothing could be of more value to Washburn, in the state and out, than the organization of her students in groups for the purpose of furthering the welfare of the college.

Sheldon Hall

A movement was launched last spring by the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. of the college to raise $25,000 with which to erect upon the Washburn campus an association building in honor of Mr. Sheldon. The purpose of the building is to furnish quarters for the Christian associations and their work, and also to provide a general student center for college enterprises of various kinds. It will probably contain the offices of the different student organizations, the staff of the college paper, athletic association, etc. It will be a most suitable place for all college receptions and social functions.

The student subscriptions at the end of the year will probably aggregate about $2,500, $1,800 having already been subscribed. The outside campaign among the friends of the college and admirers of Mr. Sheldon will be opened soon after the holidays through the columns of the Christian Herald. The editor of this paper is the one who first suggested the idea.

The MacVicar Fund

The graduates of a certain eastern university living in a single city were asked a few months ago to raise $200,000 as their share of a fund to purchase land to make a "more dignified approach to the university grounds." The subscription was opened with the announcement that no contribution less than $20,000 would be received. Some men came forward with offers of less, but the offers were rejected. In less than a week the whole sum was raised.

Five years ago a committee of the Alumni of Washburn laid before the graduates a plan for raising a fund which at the end of fifteen years would mature to $20,000, to be used as a memorial endowment commemorating the name of Peter MacVicar. About one-third of the alumni responded, and a little more than half the money due on these pledges has been paid in, so that the committee have in bank only a fraction of the amount required to make the original plan succeed. The committee now comes forward with a new appeal. It has become evident that not only a larger proportion of the alumni and ex-students must be secured as subscribers, but that all who are able must be urged to increase their subscriptions.

The men who subscribed the $20,000 in the eastern city, of course, had more means than the graduates of Washburn have, but the point is that they gave liberally in proportion to their means. They felt they owed a debt of gratitude to their alma mater, and they wanted to put within the reach of young people of coming years opportunities as rich for the future generations as these men had enjoyed in their generation or, at least, to assign the least worthy motive, they desired to do their part to make sure their college had the means to hold a place of dignity among institutions of her class. If at Washburn we formed any friendships that have been a pleasure and a help to us ever since; if any acquaintances were made in college that the years have turned to profit; if we were helped to find ourselves or given a broader outlook on life and a keener enjoyment of it because of influences we felt at Washburn, are we not obligated, as children of the college, to do something to put these privileges within the reach of others? No one would like to admit in words that he feels he conferred a favor on the college by his presence here. No one supposes he paid for all he got in Washburn, even in the meager days of her history.

In starting the MacVicar fund it was hoped two objects could be attained. The alumni would have an opportunity to express in a material way their interest in the college, and a permanent memorial could be established to a name that will always be honored by those that knew the man or his work—a name that is ineradicably wrought into all the best traditions and ideals of the college. May we call your attention to the importance of both these ends.

It must be evident to all that Washburn depends for her ultimate success on the interest and loyalty of her children—as every college does. A college may first confer her benefits on her students, but unless the students then go into the world and reflect honor back on the college, and loyally and lovingly support her and spend a great part of their energy and serious effort, indeed, as they are willing to make sacrifice to build up and strengthen her for future usefulness, the honor of the college is shorn; she becomes an object of shame for her alumni. The truly great institutions of this country have been made great not by the gifts of richly disposed capitalists, but by the loving contributions of their alumni. If you got your education at Washburn the honor of the institution lies in your hands whether you will or no. Washburn needs the financial help of her alumni. This is the year of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the college. Has she not by this time been long enough in existence to feel it right to look to her alumni as by this time holding a place in the world and ready to turn to her support? Surely we should be ashamed to continue indefinitely to depend entirely upon the beneficence of eastern capitalists. As alumni we should begin to assume the responsibility for her welfare.

On the second point, it is appropriate that the first important contribution of the alumni should take the form of a memorial endowment in honor of Dr. MacVicar. There is no name in Washburn history so worthy of a memorial. His work alone has made possible the college we know. When every man who knew him is in the grave the college will stand and continue to grow on the foundation he has laid. Every person that stops a moment to consider must see the necessity, not only of erecting a memorial to our former president, but of making that memorial, not of granite, but in the form of a permanent fund. Buildings grow old and have to be torn down, but a carefully planned endowment continues to be a real memorial after all the things on the campus have gone.

After all, when the case is squarely before us, do we not really want to undertake this work? As alumni are we willing to have the college look entirely to others for her support, or to have some other person or group of people, take from us the chance to express our feeling of obligation to the memory of Dr. MacVicar? The committee believes we do and proposes to push the subscription vigorously.

There are not ten alumni of Washburn that could easily make a lump contribution of $20,000, but it is just as true, (barring death or disaster) that there are not ten who would be unable to give $10 a year till the semi-centennial of the college if they really thought it worth while. There lies the trouble. What can be done to bring the matter forcibly enough before the alumni to insure a response. It has been decided to make at the fortieth anniversary year, the occasion of a systematic and prolonged canvass. Unless you prove it impossible by lack of response, we propose to meet the conditions necessary for celebrating the fiftieth anniversary with a memorial endowment fund in honor of the Pioneer President of the college.
